

Keeping You “In the Know...” 10/28/16

Educating the Community:

- World Usability Day is Thursday, November 10th. World Usability Day is a single day of events occurring around the world that brings together communities of professional, industrial, educational, citizen, and government groups for a common objective: to ensure that the services and products important to life are easier to access and simpler to use. It is about celebration and education – celebrating the strides made in creating usable products and educating the masses about how usability impacts daily lives. It is about making the world work better. It is about reaching out to the common citizen and spreading the message: we don't have to put up with products and services that don't work well and that human error is a misnomer. Did You Know?

- Historians believe that “Ohio” comes from the Iroquois word “O-Y-O” which means “good river”. French explorers apparently gave the name “Ohio” to the river that the state is named after because they thought it meant “beautiful river”.
